Having all staff members work at the top of their licensure is the guiding principle: If a task does not require an MD or DO, then people with those degrees shouldn’t do it. Instead, such a task should be delegated through a standing order to someone else on the staff, often a registered nurse. In a standing order, you extend your licure to lower-level staff. Write the order in detail, sign it, put it into a folder, and keep it up-to-date forgregate inspections.

With routine clinical tasks delegated to staff members using EHR tools, the typical duration of an office encounter between a primary care physician and patient can be halved from 12 minutes to 8 minutes. The time saved can be used to see more patients or for leisure time.

Having all staff members work at the top of their licensure is the guiding principle: If a task does not require an MD or DO, then people with those degrees shouldn’t do it. Instead, such a task should be delegated through a standing order to someone else on the staff, often a registered nurse. In a standing order, you extend your license to lower-level staff. Write the order in detail, sign it, put it into a folder, and keep it up-to-date for delegation inspections.

With routine clinical tasks delegated to staff members using EHR tools, the typical duration of an office encounter between a primary care physician and patient can be halved from 12 minutes to 8 minutes. The time saved can be used to see more patients or for leisure time.