Angelica: Part I

By Leslie S. Bauman, M.D.

The herb promoted melanoctytic proliferation, which upped cell counts, and fostered melanin synthesis and melanoctytic tyrosinase activity.

Although little dermatologic research has been done, the Angelica sinensis plant, also known as dong quai, appears to have antioxidant and antitumorigenic activity.